Proposal Title

Creative Critical Story of Reconciliation: A Digital Humanities Workshop

Total Amount Request from IRA

3,200

Brief Activity Description

Having explored examples of art responding to Truth and Reconciliation commissions as well as justice issues within the borders of what is now known as the United States, students will devise their own digital artistic piece addressing a local reconciliation or reparations issue. Dramaturg and Contemporary Native Drama scholar Dr. Jennifer Shook will curate a virtual reparations digital humanities workshop, featuring an in-class discussion of drama on residential boarding schools in North America, in-class discussion of truth and reconciliation in Canada, and facilitation of a digital humanities project related to the course themes. Dr. Shook will work with the class for 4 weeks to facilitate a deeper connection to devices used in Native drama to facilitate social and cultural healing. The workshop will include three virtual class visits and consultation of drafts of student projects.

Learning Outcomes & Relation to Course Offering

Students will produce a digital work of art that participates in the project of reconciliation or healing. This workshop will help students

- 1. Identify characteristics of South African and indigenous theater based on TRCs on apartheid and indigenous boarding schools.
- 3. Apply methods used in the course texts to create a creative piece that critically engages with course concepts and methods.
- 4. Create art in response to the texts under study and this historical moment.
