■授業概要・方法等

With the progress of globalization, it is extremely important for students to understand the theoretical aspects of international communication as they are practiced in the United Nations. This course will introduce communication theory in a way that helps students understand its importance for their future careers while also providing an opportunity to put the theories into practice through a United Nations simulation near the end of the course.

■授業概要・方法等

The 1995 Great Hanshin Awaji Earthquake heralded a new wave of volunteerism in Japan, which has gradually increased understanding and acceptance of its role in society. Now, there are various fields of voluntary activities such as social welfare, community design, culture and art, sport, environment, disaster relief, international exchange and co-operation, plus others.

In this class, we define what volunteerism is with consideration of both Japanese and international action-oriented case studies, through participatory learning methods, in order to understand the relationship between volunteering and community. In practice, each student will focus on his/her community where he/she lives, find some particular issues currently facing, and try to find some approaches in order to solve problems through volunteering. In addition, Japan Overseas Cooperation Volunteers (JOCV), United Nations Volunteers (UNV) and activities of international NGOs will be introduced from a global perspective.

This course will examine characteristics of English from two important viewpoints of linguistics, Generative and Cognitive Linguistics. Comparisons with Japanese and Chinese will be made when necessary. The first half of the course will discuss the structural characteristics of English and see how they can be generalized with the help of the theoretical tools of Generative Grammar, and the latter half of the course will deal with another way to look at sentence structure and see how it can help to understand what kind of language English is. The main parts of the class discussion will be made in English, but handouts in Japanese will also be provided and the major arguments of the previous week's discussion will be reviewed in Japanese at the beginning of the following class meeting.

■授業概要・方法等

As globalization has proceeded, the flow of people across regions accelerated, and for many people, cross-cultural communication became an everyday happening. It became apparent that frequent interaction between peoples with different cultural backgrounds brings about frictions, clashes, integration and co-existence. This course will focus on concrete examples of how clashes between peoples in the process of forming modern nations, assimilation by the majority and resistance against it as well as more recent contemporary interactions beyond borders affect cultures and identities of peoples.

This course will give a broad overview of the main historical and political events of American history beginning with the first contact between Europeans and native indigenous populations, the War of Independence with Britain, the Civil War, the World Wars and the Civil Rights movement. Students will gain understanding of the impact of these events on the development of American culture and society. One main theme of the course will be the examination of the emergence of the United States as a world power. We will discuss both the internal and external factors, events, debates and disputes regarding its rise to superpower status. A secondary theme will be the effect of the cultural wars on the formation of American global power. That is, the impact of the civil rights movement, the women liberation movement and immigration on America's rise to global leadership.

■授業概要・方法等

The main objective of this course is to introduce formal semantics to the beginners, who find themselves having to deal with formal semantics for the first time. Formal semantics consists of logical elucidation and analysis of meanings of words and sentences. It is quite common for participants to start off by being confused and discouraged probably because it is not always easy to appreciate the relevance of abstract semantic approach to their own interests in language.

This course starts from simple observations about meaning and step by step shows how meanings are built up. All the participants are expected to prepare for the class by reading the course book carefully and to review what they have learned at home.

形式意味論を中心に学習する。現在の意味論は難解な抽象議論の連続で簡単にわかるような内容ではない。教科書、ハンドアウ トの予習が肝要であり、ノートも各自でしっかり整理することが必要である。基礎的な数学や論理学が必須である。これはハン ドアウトで分かりやすく解説する。数学や論理学の説明は英語では無理なので日本語で説明する。人数が多いと個々の学習者の 理解に合わせた授業ができないため人数を80名程度に制限する。最初の授業に出席すること。そこで選抜する。

■授業概要・方法等

This course is an introductory marketing unit. It is designed to develop a sound understanding of various aspects of marketing functions and different applications of the marketing principles across different products and markets. Building on the principle of Active Learning, this course actively invites and encourages students to take an active role in their learning by sharing their own experiences, knowledge and views as a consumer. Yes, you are invited to claim a partial ownership of collective learning process and outcomes in the class. As a tangible learning outcome, the students will develop a Marketing Plan as a group for assessment.

A workshop with an entrepreneur or a manager with a real-life marketing problem/challenge (s) may be arranged for a student group project wherein a student group acts as a consultant and proposes alternative solutions to the problem(s) posed.

■授業概要・方法等

Societies inevitably entail the powerful and the disadvantaged with race, gender, ethnicity, social status, and generation to name a few. However, it is oftentimes hard to see the power balance between languages used by them. One example is the relationship between English that is now seen to be "the" global language and minority languages that are critically endangered. Another one is the relationship between the "standardized" dialect and "accented" varieties. This course will focus on the political nature of language choice including language enforcement and linguicsm in order to dissect various issues related to languages and also examine what each person and each community can do to tackle the issue of language choice.

This course aims to help students develop sound knowledge of theories and practices concerning international business. It develops lecture contents on both theories and practices (real life examples) and also promotes critical thinking among students. It intends to prepare students for their international business ventures. Sessions are structured in a seminar style consisting of lecture, case study and group/class discussions. The students are required to complete an international business project as a group for assessment.

A workshop with an entrepreneur or a manager with a real-life international business problem/challenge (s) may be arranged for a student group project wherein a student group acts as a consultant and propose alternative solutions to the problem(s) posed.

■授業概要・方法等

This class aims to learn the basic tools necessary to analyze the behavior of economic agents. In particular, we will develop a theoretical model of consumers and producers and study how both types of agents interact in markets. The concepts discussed in this class are extremely useful for understanding the economic behavior of the people and firms around us, as well as organizations you belong to. Furthermore, the tools you learn in this class construct the basis of analysis in all fields of economics.

体験留学 + 実戦英語カ上昇 + 経済学ロジック習得 + 英語で日本経済を語れるようになれる = 一石四鳥 Four Achievements with One Class!

This course offers an introduction to the concepts and methods of modern microeconomics. It will provide students with sound understanding of the most important economic principles and methods that can help them make better decisions and enhance the quality of their lives, careers, and future academic endeavors.

The course will consist of lectures centered on an easy-to-understand textbook that is used in some of the world's most prestigious universities. The course presentation will require the use of simple tables and graphs. Basic algebra and arithmetic operations will be used as needed; no advanced math skills are required.

Lecture notes will be available in advance on the course UNIPA web site. Please print your own copy of the lecture notes before coming to class. These notes are NOT transcripts of the particular lecture but only a general outline of its contents.

■授業概要・方法等

English is an interesting language not only as one to acquire as a second language but also as a target of academic investigation. In this course, the students will look objectively at English as a language and discuss its linguistic characteristics. Our discussion includes how English grammar can be characterized, how English vocabulary can express meaning, and what kind of principles exist in the use of English. We observe data of English expressions and attempt to make generalizations over them to elucidate overarching characteristics of the English language.

■学習・教育目標及び到達目標

Based on the contents mentioned above, the students are expected to understand English as a language. Especially, by comparing English with other languages, particularly Japanese, the students will see not only language-specific linguistic features but also universal (or generalized) linguistic characteristics. This course is related to the Department's Diploma Policy #4, #5 and #7.

■授業概要・方法等

This course examines language as a skill belonging to the individual speaker in relation to the diverse communities he/she belongs to (from immediate group to nation and society as a whole), with a view to identifying types of reciprocal influences and constraints. First, an overview of variety dimensions at the level of particular languages will be introduced (regional, diastratic, gender-based, public vs. private usage, social hierarchies etc.). Second, we will explore how the individual speaker uses the knowledge of such factors and elements of linguistic variety in concrete communication acts in order to express his/her identity, status and attitudes. Critical discussion on selected further topics, such as the relation between language and ideology, censorship, functions in texts with a social message will allow students to deepen their understanding of the general thematic area of the course.

The lectures and all class activities will be conducted in English.

More than 5 absences will result in a failing grade.

■学習・教育目標及び到達目標

In order to present the complex relationship between language and society, this course adopts a double perspective. First, we focus on how social functions and factors are reflected in language, resulting in different types of variety of each individual language. Second, we examine various strategies by which the speaker actively organizes, reinterprets and modifies existing social contexts through the use of language in certain discourse genres. By the end of the course, students will be able to:

- understand and explain key concepts related to language as a social phenomenon;
- understand and describe regional, social and functional varieties of language;
- use the corresponding English and Japanese terminology appropriately;
- apply the conceptual framework in the analysis of genuine discourse examples.

This course directly relates to items 3, 4 and 7 of the Diploma Policy of the Faculty.

■授業概要・方法等

This course is an introduction to the main issues, debates and challenges in modern Latin American society with an emphasis on breadth, i.e., a wide ranging coverage of topics and issues important to the region. The course will begin with an introduction and overview to geography, population and main economic indicators of Latin America. It will then continue with a segment on the major political, economic and social leaders. In order to comprehend current events and trends in Latin America, an understanding of basic history is necessary. One of the main focuses of the course will be on the principal debates that have shaped Latin America from the beginning of the 20th century including development policy and inequality, urbanization, social and political violence, populism and socialism, dictatorship and the spread of democracy. The course will also explore current social and cultural issues such as race, literature, music and film.

■授業概要・方法等

This course examines opportunities and challenges associated with sustainable tourism development in light of theories and practices and controversy surrounding the sector. In so doing, questions are posed to promote critical thinking and class discussion for the development of critical understanding of the subject from various perspectives of competing stakeholders in the sector. The session is structured in an interactive manner in order to facilitate mutual teaching and learning in class.

A study tour may be arranged to one of Destination Management Organisations or popular tourist destinations OR a workshop with an entrepreneur or a manager with a real-life tourism problem/challenge (s) may be arranged for a student group project wherein a student group acts as a consultant and propose alternative solutions to the problem(s) posed.
